Schedule Complete For Basketball

The Gould Academy basketball squad is now out to 18 men, who are working hard in preparation for a fine 16-game basketball schedule. The boys cut from the squad will soon be in action again when the "B" team begins its work.

With only a few practices to judge from indications are that Gould should be represented by a better-than-average quintet this year. The team will be bigger than last year's outfit, which will be of considerable advantage even though the rules have minimized the advantage of tall men by cutting out the center jump after a basket has been scored.

Norm Johnson and Earle Palmer are both about 6 foot 3 and are showing up well in the try-outs. Eddy Robertson and Parker Brown are veterans from last year who will be considerably improved players this year.

Rodney Wentzell who saw action in many of the games last year is making a strong bid for a regular position. Stanley Harvey and Donald Brown are two more men who show possibilities.

The following is the 1937-38 schedule:

- *Fri., Dec. 3 Gorham, N. H., at Bethel
- *Fri., Dec. 10 Livermore Falls at Bethel

UPTON HOTEL CLOSED

The Abbott House at Upton was closed on Friday, Nov. 12th. This place has been kept open for 50 years or more by the Abbott family. The closing of this house is a loss to the town and will be missed by the travelling public. O. Lee Abbott, who has been proprietor since the death of his father a few years ago, has a position with the Aziscoos Land Co., of Bangor, and has moved his family there. A farewell party was given the Abbott's by the townspeople last week at the Library Building.

Tells Experiences of Trip from Bethel To Texas and Utah by Automobile

We left Bethel the Sunday morning before Labor Day and as we drove through New Hampshire and Vermont we find the holiday spirit already beginning. Stores are open, ball games are in progress and crowds are in the street. We have dinner in Claremont and drive on. At 5:15 we arrived at Howes Caverns in Cobleskill, N. Y. This place has been highly commercialized, hundreds of cars are parked here. It is too late for a trip thru the cavern so we sent cards. At eight o'clock we are located in a nice tourist home in Richmondville, N. Y.

Monday we start out at seven o'clock and drive quite a distance before having breakfast. The scenery is very pretty. The sun is shining through a fog, the hills round and green trees growing way to the top, probably a Dutch dairy section, as we see large herds of cattle everywhere. The houses are small, white and neat with many flowers growing around. As we get into Pennsylvania the soil gets brick red like the dirt in Prince Edwards Island. Harrisburg is a large city through which we pass. The traffic is very heavy and we

4-H GIRL AWARDED GOLD MEDAL ON CANNING RECORD

Rachel Twitchell of Bryant Pond has been awarded a handsome gold medal for the record she submitted in the National 4-H Canning Contest. The award is made by the National Committee on 4-H Work in Chicago on approval of the County Agent and State Club Leader who designated the girl 1937 canning champion of Oxford County. The medal is shield shaped nearly one inch deep on which is embossed a horn of plenty, laurel branch and 4-leaf clover. It is provided by the Kerr Glass corporation to promote better living, together with trips for state winners to the forthcoming National 4-H Club Congress and $1,000.00 in college scholarships for sectional and national winners.

Dwyer Case Set For Nov. 30

William Donahue of Bangor pleaded not guilty to an indecent liberties charge and was committed to jail until March when the case will be disposed of. He was brought into court in June and sent to the State Hospital at Augusta.

Victor Pulkinnen of Hebron was sentenced to serve five to eight years in State prison for assault with intent to murder his wife.

Donald Kenney of South Paris and Carroll Cobb of Auburn, charged with robbery of Ernest J. Record, were sentenced to 10 to 15 years each at State prison.

Fred Smith of Connecticut, charged with transporting for immoral purposes, received a prison sentence of two to four years.

On Tuesday of this week Paul N. Dwyer, indicted for the murder of Dr. James G. Littlefield, pleaded not guilty. Justice Emery set the date of his trial for Nov. 30.

Re-dedicate Cong. Church Sunday

After nearly five months of services in the Universalist Church the Congregationalists will resume the use of their own church on Sunday. They will find the renovated church in beautiful order. While extensive alterations have been made in the interior, the effect of the old church, with its simplicity and dignity, has been admirably preserved. The color scheme is very harmonious, with the creamy woodwork and darker walls and the new dark red carpet. The new pulpit furniture, designed by the architect, John Calvin Stevens, and made in Portland, adds greatly to the richness of the interior effect. The restoration of the steeple has made a notable landmark on the skyline of Bethel, which all can enjoy.

This special service of re-dedication and of dedication of the new communion and pulpit will be held on Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. Rev. Professor Marion J. Bradshaw of Bangor Theological Seminary will be the preacher of the day. The choir, under the direction of Miss Catherine Lyon, will sing two appropriate anthems.

The following Sunday, November 28th, will be observed as an Open House Sunday, with an afternoon service at three o'clock specially planned so that the ministers and people of the neighboring churches will be able to attend. There will be brief speeches of congratulation and special music.

State To Aid Those Unemployed

Communities throughout the State, large and small, will share indirectly at least from the provisions of the Unemployment Compensation Law, especially after the start of the New Year. Aside from the task undertaken by the State Employment Service, maintained by the Unemployment Compensation Commission to procure employment for the unemployed, which will lift a part of the burden of relief from many municipalities, sizeable sums in the way of benefits to the unemployed will be paid out of the $3,200,000 fund already raised in the State through contributions from employers.

The work of the State employment service will be to reduce to the lowest possible minimum the number of idle hands in the State. Positions vacant in all lines of occupation will be made a matter of record in the field offices of the Commission. These offices will maintain two divisions: the employment service division for the placing of unemployed, and the benefit claim division for the acceptance of claims for benefits played individual to obtain suitable employment.

With the establishment of these offices employers in all parts of the State will be asked to contact the employment service bureaus when in need of help, whether skilled or unskilled. The records of one office will be available to all. In this way making it possible to obtain employment for the unemployed outside of their own immediate locality, when necessary.

CENTRAL MAINE LINE TO REACH GILEAD

Action taken at a recent special town meeting of Gilead will enable many residents in that town to have their homes wired for electricity and in addition the streets, schoolhouse and town hall will be illuminated in the modern way. By vote of the town, poles will be purchased to extend the lines of the Central Maine Power Company from West Bethel to Gilead village. It is understood that work will begin this fall on the project, going as far as the farm of A. R. Mason & Sons on the south side of the river, crossing the Androscoggin River there to the home of J. A. Chapman. From there the line will run west, accommodating several farm homes and crossing the river to Gilead village.

Maine Leads In Reducing Deaths

The State of Maine takes first place in the Nation by its reduction of fatalities happening on its streets and highways, caused by automobile accidents. By adhering closely to the inspiring word inscribed on its State Seal "Dirigo" which means "I Lead," Maine not only assumes the only bright spot in the accident record of the New England States but takes the lead in the United States by reducing its accidents by a greater percentage than any other State in the Nation.

Although there was an increase in traffic the total number of fatal accidents for the State of Maine for the first ten months of 1937 has decreased to 16% over the corresponding period of 1936. Although October again ranks as the high accident month, it shows a decrease in deaths of 7% over October, 1936, this in the face of a 6% increase in gasoline consumption over the same period last year.

Of the 26 persons killed during the month of October, 11 were pedestrians, ten were passengers and four were drivers of automobiles. One was a bicycle rider. Most of these deaths occurred in rural sections, 17 having happened in the open country and nine in the urban districts.

Night accidents again were responsible for 18 deaths, 77% of the total being thus listed. Our night accidents happen mostly at dusk when drivers of motor vehicles should have their lights turned on but due to the lack of understanding.

Finds Reservoir System for Control of Androscoggin River Floods Too Costly

Writing in the November issue of Civil Engineering, Capt. Hugh J. Casey, C. E., of the U. S. Army Engineers says that flood control reservoirs on the Androscoggin are not feasible in view of the cost of construction and the annual flood damage. It is said that this is in line with contention of Paul L. Bean, agent of the Union Water Power Co. and the Androscoggin Reservoir Co. Mr. Bean says that the engineers' figures are based on a flood which would be likely to occur no oftener than once in 500 years and it would be more economical to pay directly than to spend money for control.

Captain Casey reported in part as follows: "The Androscoggin River, with a drainage area of 3,470 square miles and a population of about 150,000, has a lake and pond area of 143 square miles, partially controlling 40% of its drainage area. "A system of four reservoirs at Rumford, Disfield, Buckfield and Oxford was considered, costing a total of $17,795,000, of which local costs of land damages and rights of way would total $4,477,000. For a flood such as that of March 1935 this system would reduce flood heights 4.6 feet at Rumford, 2.5 feet at Livermore Falls, 5 feet at Lewiston, 15.2 feet at Auburn, and 2.8 feet at Lisbon Falls. It would practically eliminate the annual flood loss on this river, which aggregates $435,500.

"Our analyses indicate that for the four reservoir system annual benefits of $374,100 would result from $1,000,000 in annual costs. The Rumford reservoir alone, costing $626,000 annually, would not flood control benefits of $322,700 annually and come nearest to approaching economic feasibility. None of these reservoirs is warranted at the present time.

"It would appear desirable for the State of Maine to acquire or control further developments in the reservoir areas under consideration, so that when future property development on the Androscoggin, with resulting increased flood damage, warrants flood control, it can be secured by construction of the reservoir system described."

While these have limited areas in which control work could be carried on, Agent Bean feels it would be good practice to attempt control here as far as possible. He cites the Peabody, Sunday, and Bear rivers as examples.

Bryant Pond Has New Industry

The manufacture of toy barbed wire entanglements, the invention of John Morrison of Mamaroneck, N. Y., is providing employment for nearly 50 people at Bryant Pond this fall. The article is manufactured in the plant of Burton L. Newton, with much of the finishing being done in homes in the village. It is said that work on the toy must be completed a week before Christmas and the total production will total 1,000 gross. Two types of the toy are made, both of which can be assembled to make lines of entanglement for war games. The barbed wire is made by cutting single wires from netting so that the cross wires become "barbs" and the strands thus made are strung to make a realistic barrier, which seems to be on its way to popularity as a Christmas toy.

STATE PHYSICAL DIRECTOR ADDRESSES UNION TEACHERS

On the evening of Nov. 9 a meeting of the teachers of the Bethel union was held at the grammar school. All of the 28 teachers employed in the five towns were present.

Harry Edwards, State Director of Physical Education, was the speaker. Mr. Edwards stressed the importance of teaching health in the schools and the value of physical activities in the all around development of the child. He gave many practical and helpful suggestions for both indoor and outdoor games.

It is hoped that the Bethel union can hold a play or field day for all its pupils in the spring. This will mean the assembly of approximately 550 children for an afternoon devoted to games and other physical activities.

KETCHUM POST OFFICE IN EXISTENCE 12 YEARS

It has been learned that mail delivery on Sunday River, which was resumed on Tuesday of this week, was discontinued in 1913 when the Ketchum post office was closed. The office in that place was established in 1901 and closed in 1913. Augustus Littlefield, now of Bethel, was postmaster during the entire period and at the beginning carried the mail over the star route from North Bethel Post Office to Ketchum. Others who carried the mail up the Sunday River Valley were Ben Aldrich and Grover Gorman.

We all wish to heartily thank our friends for their help in making the route a success. Special thanks is extended to our spokesman, James W. Reynolds of this untiring efforts. By their efforts we can now have daily papers and know more about what the outside world is doing.

LOST HORIZON

A realization of Robert Risk's screen version of James Hilton's novel. Narrative by Albert Duffy.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED BEFORE Robert Conway, British diplomat in the East, is found in a small Chinese mission after having been missing for more than a year. He has lost his memory but readily agrees to return to England with Lord Gainsford, his rescuer. But when his memory suddenly comes back and he realizes that he must leave the boat and return to Shangri-la. He tells Gainsford of the evacuation of Bukhara, where he was captured during a bandit attack. The white residents escape by plane and Conway with his brother George, an American named Barnard, Gloria Stone, a golden prostitute, and Lovell, an English scientist, are the passengers in the last plane. They soon discover that they have been kidnapped. For a day and a night the plane flies on, climbing higher and higher to clear the treacherous mountain peaks. At last the motor sputters and goes dead. The plane falls out of the sky and the ground and Conway and George enter the cockpit to find the pilot. They find him slumped over his controls—dead. Conway studies the pilot's map and concludes that they have come about two thousand miles into Tibet and are at least a thousand miles from the nearest civilization. Facing a slow and tortuous death from starvation, they are rescued by a caravan of natives led by a Chinese who introduces himself as Chang and offers them shelter in a nearby lamastery. It is a terrifying journey through narrow, precipitous mountain passes and the entire party is exhausted when, at last, they creep around a narrow ledge and stop to gaze at the sight before them. It is a strange eye-filling horizon diffusing a softness and warmth that is unbelievable. "Welcome to Shangri-la," says Chang.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

Chapter Four

The party soon made the descent into the valley and came to a halt at the foot of a wide marble stairway leading into the lamastery. The servants who show you to your quarters, Chang said, "do hope you will find them suitable."

The party mounted the stairs after the servants leaving only Conway who was rapidly studying the lamastery building in an upper window. He saw two robed lamas watching him curiously. Farther over, on a narrow terrace half hidden by a floral arbor, his eyes were attracted by the sight of a girl—a girl whose beautiful oval face was framed in a halo of rich brown hair. She was standing quietly, looking down at Conway intently.

After dinner that night it was Lovell who first broached the subject of their departure.

"I regret that I cannot help you," said Chang. "Unfortunately, we have no wireless here. In fact, we have no means of contact with the outside world."

"In that event," said Lovell, "hadn't we better make arrangements for porters to take us back to civilization?"

"Are you so certain?" Chang asked quietly. "That you're away from it?"

Lovell mumbled a confused apology. "We'll pay your natives anything within reason," he offered.

"That's of no use," said Chang. "We have no porters here. The men you saw this morning are our own people and they never venture beyond the point where you met them. It is much too hazardous. However, there is a tribe of porters some five hundred miles from here. They are our only contact with the outside world and in that respect you are indeed fortunate for we are expecting a shipment from them almost any time."

Chang acted as Conway's guide on his inspection of Shangri-la the next morning.

"Shangri-la," Conway said, "you—that mysterious pilot—are all tied up in a well-worked-out plan to kidnap us and bring us here against our will. Am I right?"

"Your Western mind is given to flights of fancy," Chang replied. "Shall we go in? I should like to show you some of our rare treasures." Conway followed him into a huge library whose walls were lined with books.

"Two hundred and fifty thousand volumes—and more," Chang announced proudly.

"You keep yourself well informed here," he commented.

"Oh yes," said Chang. "Are you interested in comparative religion?"

"Only casually. Incidentally, what religion do you follow here?"

"We follow many," Chang explained. "We do not hold that any particular religion is completely false. To put it simply, I should say that our general belief is in moderation. We preach the virtue of avoiding excesses of all kinds, even including excesses of virtue."

"That's intelligent," said Conway.

"In the valley," Chang continued, "we rule with moderate strictness, and in return we are satisfied with moderate obedience. As a result, our people are moderately sober, moderately chaste and moderately honest."

"Aren't there any disputes about women?"

"Only rarely. You see, it is not considered good manners to take a woman that another man wants."

"Suppose," Conway persisted, "somebody wanted her so badly he didn't give a hang about good manners?"

"In that event," Chang smiled, "it would be good manners on the part of the other man to let him have her. You'd be surprised, Conway, how a little courtesy all around helps to smooth out the most complicated problems."

Conway's attention during the latter part of Chang's explanation had wandered to the adjoining music room where he could see and hear his mysterious girl of yesterday playing a violin to the accompaniment of a white haired old man.

"At some time in the future," Chang said, "you'll have the pleasure of meeting her."

Conway took one last look at her and then turned to follow Chang. "Some man," he said, "had better get ready to be very courteous to me."

A strange peace settled over the little group at Shangri-la in the ensuing weeks. The racking cough that had hounded Gloria Stone left her and she seemed to bloom anew in this peaceful environment. She accepted the sincere proffer of friendship that Barnard made to her.

Lovell contented himself with daily rips in search of fossils which he felt certain must abound in this mountain fastness. Conway spent most of his time riding through the valley and nurturing his friendship with the valley folk and with Sundry Bisset the mysterious girl whom he had met at long last.

Only George remained rebellious at their enforced confinement at Shangri-la. Nor did the fact that he had met and been attracted to a beautiful Russian girl, Maria, quiet his restlessness. Each passing day saw him becoming more impatient and his last nerves snapped one night after dinner. Drawing a pistol, he started out with the avowed intention of forcing Chang to give him information about the porters. A servant, terrified at the sight of the gun and from George while the latter pumped a stream of bullets after him. It was then that Conway overtook his brother, disarmed him and knocked him out with a single well-directed punch.

While they were trying to revive George, Chang joined the group. Conway spoke to him. "Personally I have enjoyed every minute of our enforced stay at Shangri-la," he said, "but my brother is not of the same mind. I think it's time we were given some idea as to what this is all about."

"Strange," said the imperturbable Chang, "when all this happened I was bringing the most exciting news to you. The High Lama wants to see you."

"The High Lama?" Barnard demanded. "Who in blazes is he? I thought you ran this joint."

"The High Lama is the only one from whom any information or assistance can come."

Conway stood up. "That's the man I want to see," he said quietly. "Let's go to him."

Conway found himself more and more attracted by the beautiful Sundry Bisset. (Posed by Ronald Colman and Jane Wyatt.)

DEATH TRAILS DIVERSION OF HIGHWAY FUNDS

Commenting recently on the enviable record of Maine in decreasing automobile fatalities for 1937, J. B. Campbell, Secretary of the Maine Petroleum Industries Committee, called attention to a study being made which indicates that increased highway deaths in other states are paralleling the diversion of highway tax funds to purposes other than highway financing.

Maine, with a 16% drop in automobile fatalities for the first ten months of this year compared to a like period of 1936, leads the nation in reducing such deaths. It is a significant fact that in Maine all revenue derived from state automobile taxes goes for roads, the people having initiated and passed an anti-diversion law in September, 1936.

In New York, on the other hand, a state in which 60 cents of every dollar paid by its motorists last year was diverted to non-highway purposes, 1,863 persons were killed and 69,237 were injured during the first seven months of this year, an increase of 18% in fatalities over the corresponding period in 1936. Only 13 cents of each of the $102,000,000 in automotive taxes collected in New York in 1936 was used for the construction and maintenance of state highways.

"The decrease in available highway funds through diversion," said Mr. Campbell, "creates a tendency to neglect highway safety projects."

The Albany Circle was a great success when entertained by the men on Friday night.
